Contents

1 Impetus: the imperatives of publication

- 1.1 Publishing as knowledge production
- 1.2 Publishing as regulation and reward
- 1.3 Publishing and the measurement of esteem
- 1.4 Counting the costs
- 1.5 Conclusions: an abundance of riches?

2 Locality: global and local publishing

- 2.1 Everybody's doing it: going global
- 2.2 Staying local: challenges and benefits
- 2.3 Local versus global knowledge
- 2.4 Publishing from the periphery
- 2.5 Conclusions: making space for the local

3 Language: visibility and inequality

- 3.1 English in academic publishing: dominance or prevalence?
- 3.2 English and communicative inequality in writing for publication
- 3.3 Language, publishing, and non-Anglophone authors
- 3.4 Conclusions: disadvantage and modest mitigations

4 Authoring: engagement and collaboration

- 4.1 Academic authoring and rhetorical engagement
- 4.2 Authoring as co-authoring: collaborative research
- 4.3 Death of the author? Changing conceptions and contested contributions
- 4.4 Conclusions: authorship matters

5 Participation: community and expertise

5.1 Global communities, local interactions, and personal positions
5.2 Experts and newcomers
5.3 Participation as learning
5.4 Conclusions: a thoroughly social practice

6 Genres: articles and alternatives

6.1 Research articles: 'the master narrative'
6.2 Books, blogs, and other genres
6.3 Chains, networks, and transformations
6.4 Conclusions: affordances and challenges

7 Journals: impact and access

7.1 Roles, ranks, and relevance: journals in academic publishing
7.2 Establishing a brand: journal descriptions
7.3 Publishers, predators, and access
7.4 Conclusions: the commercial/academic interface

8 Gatekeepers: evaluation and regulation

8.1 Purposes, practices, and problems of peer review
8.2 'Revise and resubmit': commentary in peer reviews
8.3 Negotiating with editors
8.4 Conclusions: a question of faith

9 Pedagogy: choices and strategies

9.1 English for research purposes: assumptions and curricula
9.2 Focus on language
9.3 Focus on strategies
9.4 Conclusions and final thoughts

References